"With Golovkin in our stable, if he faces one of the two men who are standing in front of us, both Sergio and Murray, we'll put a fight together," Gomez told BoxingScene.com. "We just want to make sure they agree. We have no plans to fight Golovkin unless they are in the mix. We want a unification fight. We have no plans to go to Golovkin for a unification fight until they are willing to go to the table and discuss the situation. It's a little strange. It's the only reason we aren't going after Golovkin right now." Golden Boy Promotions CEO Richard Schaefer said that the company would not offer Golovkin a deal that included a mandatory defense against Murray or Martinez. Schaefer indicated that the chances of Golovkin fighting Murray or Martinez are "probably not going to happen." Murray and Martinez are both facing mandatory challengers - Yordenis Ugas (23-3-3, 14KOs) and Carlos Molina (21-2-2, 16KOs), respectively. "When you look at what Golovkin is asking for - all we ask for is what the other guys have already been offered - you wonder why they aren't willing to do it," Schaefer said. "It's like a chicken-egg situation. We want to put a fight together, they haven't agreed to it, they haven't agreed to come to the table." Murray, who faces Molina on March 24, insists that there is no bad blood between him and Golovkin, but is rather looking at the 82157476af
